

Net Promoter Score

A Trusted Anchor for Customer Experience Management Programs

Net Promoter Score (NPS) is a trusted measurement of the consumer experience and indicator of sentiment. An index ranging from -100 to 100, NPS measures the willingness of customers to recommend a company's products or services to others.

Since 2003 it has been the benchmark for managing consumer perception of brands. Bain analysis shows that companies that achieve long-term profitable growth have Net Promoter Scores (NPS) two times higher than the average company. And NPS leaders on average grow at more than twice the rate of competitors.

How NPS calculated?

NPS is calculated using a 0-10 scale. Consumers are given the question prompt of, "How likely is it that you would recommend [the brand or company] to a friend or colleague?". Responses are then grouped into one of three categories.

10-9
Promoters

- These customers tend to be enthusiastic advocates or loyalists to the brand, and love their offerings.
- They are far more likely than others to remain customers and to increase their purchases over time.
- According to Bain & Co., they account for more than 80% of referrals in most businesses.

8-7
Passives

- These respondents are satisfied with the products or services of a brand, and feel they adequately meet their expectations.
- They might lack passion about the offerings experienced by promoters and detractors, and feel neutral.
- Their repurchase and referral rates are as much as 50% lower than those of promoters. Their referrals are likely to be qualified and less enthusiastic.

6-0
Detractors

- These are unhappy customers, who have negative sentiment about a brand.
- These respondents can be a liability that may impede a company's growth by spreading negative word-of-mouth, both offline and through review sites, and social media posts.
- They account for more than 80% of negative word-of-mouth. They have high rates of churn and defection.

To determine your NPS score, take the percentage of promoters (9-10) and subtract the percentage of detractors (6 or lower). That number is your Net Promoter Score.

The Signpost Solution

Signpost uses NPS to proactively and automatically capture feedback following a transaction or interaction customers have with a brand. The platform also collects qualitative feedback, so that brands can continue to iterate on the experience and identify areas of opportunity, across each location.

Based on the NPS responses, Signpost's AI, Mia, is able to surface potential detractors to the brand, so they can reach out in pursuit of a resolution before a harmful review is posted publicly. Mia also reaches out to promoters to encourage more positive word-of-mouth, including 5-star reviews across Google, Yelp, Facebook, and many other of the review sites that prospects consult when evaluating brands.

This combination of visibility and proactive engagements empowers brands to maintain an online reputation that is reflective of their commitment to quality.
